FIRST VESSEL FOR MELBOUR

treats of the equity with which their claims to an equitable share of the land fund had been received, they were called upon to state how glaringly every principle of equity and good government had been violated. The facts were astounding. From two sources of revenue alone, in fifteen months, upwards of £20,000 had been received, for which they had not received a single immigrant; to say nothing of the large amount derived from the same sources from 1842 to 1850, and out of which but one emigrant vessel had come. The additions to the popular coastwise trade were to be traced to private enterprise only, as Government had not assisted. The question of immigration, thus viewed politically, was prominently worthy of their consideration, and they had cause to regret that the privilege of petitioning—which was next, as a right, to that of election—had not been exercised before in the manner then proposed. A fair remuneration for capital employed here must depend upon a steady increase of population, and its healthy employment. The state at which the rocks and headlands intersected required that a fair sum be a constant supply of men, which should be proportioned to them, and this necessity was more plain before such a supply would in time supplant a class of labourers now extensively employed, and whose habits and manners forbade their becoming permanent residents. (Cheers.) Another consequence might be the abandonment of the waste of food occasioned by rendering down stock; and the banks of the rivers and streams, abounding in trout, salmon, and other fish, in the culture of cotton; an article which must one day be a prominent export. It would be folly to invite labour here for the purpose of reducing it below its value; but why asked for it because had shown its necessity to all classes. Not only would it profit the district, but also the immigrant. (Cheers.) It was to be deplored that so many labourers were moving to the gold fields, knowing that thousands already had, and latter cause to leave them rather rashly. But though that came, yet with the prospect of emigration, they might confidently hope that the advantages of their soil and climate—superior to those of other districts in the colony—would prove the stay of youth, the support and comfort of old age, when the allurement of gold digging had ceased. He now begged to move that the petition he had read be adopted. (Cheers.)

Mr. ROBERT LITTLE seconded the motion, which was passed unanimously, amid loud cheering.

Mr. COOKE proposed: "That the foregoing resolutions, together with the petition, be inserted twice in each of the local papers, and twice in each of the Sydney papers, Herald and Empire, weekly; and that a subscription be immediately entered into to defray expenses.

After a few remarks from the mover, the motion was seconded by Mr. WILLIAM KENT, and carried unanimously.

It was then proposed by Mr. D. C. MC CONNELL, J.P., seconded by Mr. HENRY BUCKLEY, and carried, that the following Business, with power to add to their number, do form a committee, for the objects of this meeting, viz., Messrs. J. Richardson, M.L.C., W. Wilson, J.P., D. C. Mc Connell, J.P., H. Buckley, R. Little, A. Eldridge, and G. F. Poole.

On the motion of Mr. R. Little, seconded by Dr. CANNAN, Mr. Richardson left the chair, and Mr. Prior took the same; when a vote of thanks was proposed and carried by acclamation, Mr. Mc Connell's able and impartial conduct in the chair.

The meeting then separated, after subscriptions had been commenced for the proposed object.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

DARBY V. REID.
To the Editors of the Sydney Morning Herald, GENTLEMEN.—The garbled manner in which you have inserted this trial, induces me to send you a copy of the evidence of the Rev. C. P. N. Wilton, by whom you will perceive the conviction of Mr. Reid, and that you will perceive the conviction of his son, Mr. Robert Reid, of a public room. Captain Livingston, stated Mr. Reid boasted he had cheap law, his friends Bradley and Darby would not charge him law expenses; in fact, not one witness's evidence is stated correctly, and the eloquent speech of the Solicitor-General treated with contempt. With Mr. Darvall's rod-montage, I have nothing to say, for, although he boasted I had abused Darby in the couch to and from his school, the elder son, to principal reason for a trial being granted. Alexander Flood was allowed to read a statement he had made eight months subsequent to the transaction, to refresh his memory. If such be law, what will become of us?

The verdict of the jury was, we find for the plaintiff, nominal damages, one farthing.

Darby was well supported, he had every point in his favor, with the amount of damages given for coaks and hems imposed upon the jury, previous to a witness being called.

J. REID.
P.S.—Had you or any other person behaved to me as Darby did, I would have told them the truth, as it did Darby, and no mistake.

Newcastle, March 12.

DARBY V. REID.
MAITLAND CIRCUIT, MARCH 6.

The Rev. C. P. N. Wilton being duly sworn deposed: I have not any interest in Darby's case; he is the son of a chaplain at Newcastle; he has continued to do so up to this, and from that period; he is a teacher and schoolmaster; I remember a conversation that took place between Reid and myself at the commencement of this year; I was coming out of Darby's house, and my attention was arrested by seeing Reid at one of his windows, and by him calling to me; I went to his door, and he began abusing me; I said Reid what he was doing; he said, "I am not a teacher, I am a schoolmaster; he is a teacher, and he is a schoolmaster; he has broken his promise; I took him to be a gentleman, as his father was, whom I knew, but I find I was mistaken. And then he repeated these words, "He is a liar and a scoundrel." I said it was pity to use these expressions, as he might be mistaken in the nature of Mr. Darby's promises, and that he would ruin his school; he said, "I am not a teacher, I am a schoolmaster; he has broken his promise; I took him to be a gentleman, as his father was, whom I knew, but I find I was mistaken. And then he repeated these words, "He is a liar and a scoundrel."

I said it was not right to use these expressions, as he might be mistaken in the nature of Mr. Darby's promises, and that he would ruin his school; he said, "I am not a teacher, I am a schoolmaster; he has broken his promise; I took him to be a gentleman, as his father was, whom I knew, but I find I was mistaken.
